

Driving Advice

Amina

When you drive in Spain you have to use your horn all the time. You use your horn to tell other drivers where you are. You even use your horn to say hello to your friends. In the UK drivers are very quiet. You shouldn't use your horn in the UK unless you are really angry.

In Spain people park their cars anywhere. We park on the pavement and on the grass. In the UK you have to be careful. If you park in the wrong place you might get a fine.

Dave

You have to know the rules if you drive in the UK. You have to have insurance, car tax and an MOT for your car. If you don't have these things and the police catch you, you're in big trouble. You must have a driving licence too, that's really important.

I think that there are too many rules. There are too many lights and signs. If you do anything wrong, other drivers get very angry with you.

Steve

People are generally quite polite on the road in the UK. Drivers flash their headlights to signal that you can go. They sometimes stop to let people cross the road. If you go to London you have to be really careful, the drivers are crazy and they drive too fast.

Carla

I hate driving in the UK. I think people should slow down, they drive too fast. If you cross the road you should be really careful. You should be really careful if you are riding a bike on the roads because some drivers don't even see you. I never want to drive in the UK.

Please answer the questions

1. Who thinks English drivers are polite?
2. Who thinks English drivers are too polite?
3. Who comes from Spain?
4. Who thinks there are too many rules?
5. Who never wants to drive in the UK?
6. When should you use your horn in the UK?
7. Why does Steve think UK drivers are polite?
8. What four things do you need to drive in the UK?
9. Why do drivers flash their headlights?
10. Why do some drivers get angry?